

Anne Marie FitzGerald, Ed.D.

Anne Marie FitzGerald is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Educational Foundations and Leadership, School of Education, Duquesne University. She received her Ed.D. in Educational Leadership from Lehigh University where she assisted in the Center for Developing Urban Educational Leaders and taught in the International and Overseas Educational Leadership program. Her practitioner experience includes K-8 second-language teaching in diverse public schools in Canada and serving as a PreK- 5 principal in a number of settings, including the US, Colombia, and Kuwait. She is a curriculum developer for the Leaders Supporting Diverse Learners project of the University Council for Educational Administration (UCEA). Her research interests include urban school reform initiatives such as the community school model, community engaged research, the intersection of housing and education policy, and culturally relevant parental engagement. Her goal is to foster strengths-based thinking and effective action in aspiring school leaders in service of diverse students and their families.

Education:

Ed.D., Educational Leadership, Lehigh University, 2013

M.Ed., Educational Administration, The College of New Jersey, 2000

B.Ed., K-8 Education, The University of Western Ontario, 1983