

Bradley Hull

Brad Hull's education and experience extend from classical music performer, to college instructor, policy maker, national association manager, education researcher, and school administrator. He holds a Doctor of Philosophy degree in Education Leadership, a Masters in Music, a Masters in Liberal Studies, a Bachelor of Music in piano and a Bachelor of Arts in German Cultural Studies.

In addition to performing as a pianist across the east coast and teaching for many years at the college level, Dr. Hull has experience in Career and Technical Education (CTE) being a CTE specialist at the Vermont Department of Education where he worked within the school systems to create and implement teacher professional development programs. Later as school administrator for a CTE secondary school, he worked to develop career academies, incorporate higher-order thinking skills into the curriculum, and create a staff culture of continuous learning and collaborative support.

While in Washington, he served as the Deputy Executive Director and Chief of Staff at the National Association of State Boards of Education and Vice President and Chief Operating Officer at the National Network of State Teachers of the Year. As an executive manager in these associations, he worked to ensure the comprehensive implementation of the strategic plan, develop and strengthen partnerships with other organizations, and manage all staff and department functions.

This past November he began a new journey moving back to his home state to work as Director of Education Services and Senior Policy Analyst for the Pennsylvania State Education Association. His greatest passions include teaching (especially arts appreciation), playing Chopin, working for the causes of social justice, and just about anything that involves beauty and creativity.

For more information and writings, see <https://www.linkedin.com/in/bradleyjhull>